Biography and Information – Matty Metcalfe and Crewe D’Bayou

(Playing Sunday, September 6th from 3:00-4:00 PM)

Come dance and sing along to “the best New Orleans-style party this side of the Louisiana state line.” Matty Metcalfe picked up an accordion from a yard sale at age 15 and began a journey that would take him around the world. After hearing Buckwheat Zydeco play the squeezebox, Matty tightened his focus to Louisiana-based Cajun and Zydeco music. With Crewe d’Bayou, Matty blends songs and styles from New Orleans musical icons--Professor Longhair, Allan Toussaint, and Dr. John, to mention a few--with contemporary explorations in jazz, Latin, and European music, creating a new sound that at once recalls the inimitable dance grooves and parade lines of Mardi Gras, but also takes the listener on a trans-continental musical expedition.

Matty Metcalfe and Crewe d’Bayou show their New Orleans roots proudly, reinterpreting and revitalizing songs by Ray Charles, Beausoleil, and the Meters—giving each a distinctively different flavor, but tying them together with infectious dance beats and sing-along choruses. Led by Matty’s swinging accordion melodies, the band recreates the feel of Bourbon Street on Fat Tuesday. With an ever-expanding repertoire of over one hundred songs, dating back to those of Fats Domino and the early Dixieland bands, and up to present day hits--including many of Metcalfe’s original Bayou-inspired tunes.

Biography and Information -Bio Ritmo

(Playing Sunday, September 6th from 4:00-7:00 PM)

Bio Ritmo’s enticing vintage salsa may very well have you dancing like it’s 1973, but not before realizing you’ve never heard anything like it. For one thing, they don’t pretend that the last 30 years of music never happened; they don’t bury their love for punk, disco, electronica, Brazilian pop, Afro-beat, Middle Eastern music and classical music when making their batch of salsa. Sometimes, the fusion is brash and in-your-face, Other times, the permeation is much more subtle, After 17 years in the game, this is where Bio Ritmo is today.

Puerto Rican natives Jorge Negrón (vocals, maracas) and Rei Álvarez (vocals, güiro, clave), and local rocker Jim Thomson (bongos, güiro) co-founded Bio Ritmo in 1991 as an Afro-Latin drumming ensemble. Though Negrón and Álvarez were teens living in Puerto Rico during the ‘70s salsa craze, it wasn’t until their unlikely encounter in Richmond that they realized their love for salsa and their need to make that music. Álvarez says, “The reason we were so crazy about this old salsa is that it rocked! It was hardcore, groovin’ stuff!” All the band members share a special affinity for salsa clásica, salsa dura, the real deal, and decided to model themselves on that old school sound. Though Negrón served as the de facto elder statesman of the band, it was really his expansive, deep, vintage salsa collection that is credited for being the band’s teacher and inspiration. Though at first they could not scratch that güiro just right, they had something more valuable going for them: hunger, passion, ganas.
